Lilian, re-entering, is informed by her mother that Mr. Brown is in the grounds. whereupon the girl, anticipating that her mother would be displeased with the visit, protests that she did not invite him. Bady Matilda says she knows that, but, much to the surprise of Lilian, requests her to make herself particularly agreeable to him. Mr. Brown afterwards appears and has a tête-a-tête with Lilian, in the course of which he takes exception to her slang, remarking that "a caution for snakes" is rather strong language for a lady to make use of. As he disappears she declares that she does not like him at all and asks herself what right he had to find fault with her language. Fitz. Ursemakes his appearance fre-

This death in the family puts out of the question Lilian's prospect of spending the season in Loudon and her consequent chance of making a match. Lilian becomes acquainted with fact of the mortgage falling due, and the curtain falls on a scene between her and Brown, in which she confides to him the care of her pets and old

Brown on his part, has naturally fallen in love with the warm-hearted girl who had confided the care of her pats to him, and speaks on the subject to Ludy Matilda, who, having regard to the family circumstances and his extrémely generous conduct, gladly consents to his speaking to Lilian Lilian has likewise conceived an affection for Brown, and her consent is easily won. We have thus two love scenes, one between Fitze-Urse and Fanny Bunter, and one between Brown and Lilian, the two being as different as the characters of the parties concerned. In the midst of all this happiness Bunter, who was not in the secret, arrives to take his daughter home. At the same time arrive telegrams announcing a commercial panio and the shakiness of Brown's house, to save which £ 0,000 is required immediately. > careful study she had evidently given the part bore good fruit, and the consequence was that the Lady Matilda Vavasour's appearance on the stage last night was a finished piece of acting. The auxious and scheming mother, the strongminded, proud, and wilful woman; and the exultant foe were all alike faithfully represented, and Mrs. Hookey has decidedly scored another success. The lovely, passionate, playful character of Lilian Vavasour gave Mrs. Bernard the opportunity of achieving another triumph. Every lock, gesture, attitude, and intonation of voice must have been the subject of minute study, founded upon the most artistic taste, and the perfect result of the whole gave a delighted andience as great a treat as has fallen to their lot for many a day. As Mrs. Bernard was realistic in her delineation of Lilian, so was sho in person a sight to please the eye. Th expressive countenance of the true artist was there, and, nature having endowed her with singular grace of person, Mrs. Bernard's Lilian Vavasour will, we think, continue for some time as a very pleasant memory to those who bad the privilege of witnessing the happy concoption! We have said that Mrs. Bernard scored another triumph, and advisedly, for it is indeed a triumph of artistic skill to star the sympathetic tear in the eye of the listener The emotional parts of the delineation were represented with such natural anguish of soul that mony a heart had a tender chord touched by the mimic grief. The part of the parvenue Mrs. Bunter fell to the lot of Mrs. Chervan, who gave the charactor a thorough rendering; being, however, but aubaidiary, the part gave but a poor opportunity to display the undoubted histrionic talents possessed by Mrs. Chervau. Miss Lejeune made her debut in the part of the sentimental and would-be sethetic Fanny Bunter, and, all things considered the character was fairly well portrayed. A little experience will do much to bring out the points which this lady gave evidence of possessing, and amongst other things experience will teach the mode of throwing pleasant voice farther into the house; with practice, too, the power of merging self in the imaginary character will increase. The part of Marmaduke Vavasour found a good exponent in Mr. Auld, who was capitally got up; but he might, with advantage, have brought out his points with a little more force. He earned a fair share of applause. Mr. Crysparkle's delineation of the character of Samuel Brown, the Liverpool merchant, had obviously been carefully studied, and the result was eminently satisfactory. The suber, high-minded man of business, whose life had hitherto been uncoloured by romance and full of hard facts. was portrayed with the utmost fidelity to nature. In all the scenes with Lilian he was manly straightforward, and frank, as suited the character, but he was rather wanting in passion later on. Saving this slight drawback, the representation was all that could be desired. Mr. Crysparkle's fine acting appealed strongly to the sympathies o the audience and elicited frequent, and well deserved applause. Bertie Fitz-Urse, the shallowpated, vapid, but good-natured young sprig of nobility, was admirably represented by Mr Leslie. The rôle was not an easy one to sustain; but the character was depicted in a thoroughly realistic and most consistent manner through out. CHINA AND RUSSIA IN CENTRAL

During the past week telegrams have been arriving from China of a more or less disturbing character. In one we are told that Chung-How, the Chinese envoy, who had returned from St. Petersburg after negotiating for the surrender of Kuldis, was disgraced; in another that he had been decapitated, and that there had been a populse disturbance in Peking: lastly, that China was buying war material from Europe on a large differences with Russia in regard to the retrocession of the province of Kuldia, with all its commercial and strategicadvantages. We spoke in a recentarticle of the probability that Russia would find the claims of the Government of Peking The performance was so entirely successful less easy to deal with than her position as a militant Power when opposed to European forces might have led her to anticipate. The nulimited command of men and possession of arms of prean advantage of a very preponderating kind for the Chinese, and the latter going far towards equalizing the disparity hitherto existing by reason of superiority of discipline and military science on the part of the Russians. Chung-How, as we were informed yesterday, has prohably not been actually beheaded, but his condemnstion would not the less indicate the sudden reorndesence of a national and anti-foreign spirit in China; and may presure the commencement of hostilities in the centre of Asia for the recovery of the wrested province, which will find ample occupation for any force the Russians can muster in that remote region. From this point of view it has a special interest The following appointments have been made for us, since such a conflict would leave Russia little able, if disposed, to proscoute a campaign against the Tekke Turkomans or Morv. Whatever may be the isence, we may anticipate that the Kuldja difficulty will give Russia occupatime to come, and the effect of such preoccupation will be felt west of the Indus in any Russian enterprises in that direction. No doubt, if Lord Northbrook, who was then Viceroy of the war into the enemy's country at vulnerable India. Most of them, however, held different points. But for this theatre of opera-Lord Hartington Secretary for Ireland, and I tions it may well be doubted whether the Russians have forces at their command on the Amoor and neighbouring coasts sufficient to enable them to act with effect. By the side of such a war as this, the dispute between Chine and Japan respecting the suzerainty of the Loochoo group becomes insignificant; save in so far as the persistency of the Chinese Government in this direction points to the characteristic tenscity of the race in any object where their national pride of dominion is concerned, and the dominant influence at this moment of the more bigoted party of politicians at Peking, always hostile to foreign innovation or encroachment.—

The Times, referring to the meeting held at the Mansion House, says there can be no doubt that thrift is a sadly neglected virtue. The working classes—and we might go much higher -will never be persuaded that it is really necessary to save. No appeals to their common sense, their selfishness, or their self-respect will avail against the evident fact that improvidance is very seldom punished, or, at least, much punished, in this country. They see a vast number of institutions and societies, all framed on purely benevolent principles, for the relief of every kind of want. Many of them would feel they had not availed themselves of their full rights if they had not claimed the benefit of some eleemosynary institution of other. Improvidence, though a blot on the national character and fatal to the formation of the higher virtues. s one secret of our national nower. Below a pertain class we have comparatively few persons of independent means. There is no more remarkable feature of English society in comparison with the French than the number of persons who continue in harness, doing a fair amount of work the whole of their lives, when by the most moderate exercise of prudence and self-denial they might have acquired a competence at forty or fifty. The result is that they are serving their country to the very last, and no doubt the country is the better for the active service of every citizen. As a rule. however, improvidence is a loss to the country. It throws the aged, the orphan, and the widow upon the hands of a society that has not the heart to repudiate them. Industry is continually ologged and burdened with such encumbrances; but in this, as in some other respects, England may find she has to mand her ways.

How soon popular songs become old. Even now "My Grandfather's Clock" may be classed among the old-time pieces.

I fell to musing. We are too intent On gaining that to which our minds are bent; We choose, then fling the fragments far and wide, But speil the picture on the other side! A prize is offered; others seek it, too; But on we press with only self in view, We gain our point, and punse well satisfied, But ah! the picture on the other side. On this, a sound of revely we hear; On that, a wall of mouning strikes the ear; On this a carriage stands with groom and bride,

A hearso is waiting on the other side. We call it trash-we tread it roughly down, The thing which others might have deemed a crown; An infant's oyes, anointed, see the gold, Where we, world-blinded, only brass behold. We pluck a weed and ding it to the breeze A flower of fairest hue another sees, We strike a chord with caroless smile and jest, And break a heart-string in another's breast. Trend soft and softer still as on you go. With eyes washed clear in Love's ancinting glow;

Life's page well finished, turn it, satisfied, And lo! Heaven's picture's on the other side. -Lelia Monlogue ·

AN AWKWARD PORTMANTEAU. The proprietress of a small inn at Valenciennes has just mot with a curious adventure. It seems from the account given of the incident by the Echo du Nord that a man presented himself at the inn and made a request to be admitted, together with a very allotted to him a second floor room, offered in expressing the juice of the grapes: help him in_carrying upstairs the burden which, seemed too heavy for his unaided it contained articles of a very delicate and until after resting and refreshing himself he ror perceived that something moved within it. So great was her terror that she sank down speechless and breathless in a chair. and in that position was found by a gendarme who came to protest against the late hour at which the place was kept open. As soon as the cause had been explained to this minion of the law, he forgot the primary object of his visit in his curiosity to explore the mysterious piece of luggage, and drawing his sword, soon solved all doubts by cutting open the leather. He had no sooner done so than a stout man jumped out, pistol in accordingly arrested forthwith, and are now in prison.—Globe.
